Riverlife Breaks Ground on Restoration of Allegheny Landing Park and Dock
Construction for one of the nation's first urban riverfront sculpture parks begins this fall

PITTSBURGH, PA - Allegheny Landing Park and the dock below will soon be bustling with new activity as Riverlife begins construction on one of Pittsburgh's first modern riverfront parks.

Allegheny Landing Park, created in the 1980s, was the first sculptural riverfront park in Pittsburgh. With its iconic view of the city, the park has been loved to death, and Riverlife has elected to oversee its restoration. For the last 3 years Riverlife has worked tirelessly on its improvement, obtaining an arts commission approval, installing cafe seating and lighting, and watching it return to life with activity.

After having gone through a full restoration, the Allegheny Landing dock was destroyed in an unprecedented flood and ice storm in 2018. Now Riverlife is working to complete the first of a multi-phase plan for highly visible and necessary waterfront improvements at the Allegheny Landing dock that will activate the river's edge and provide safe accessibility for Pittsburghers and visitors.

"The dock at Allegheny Landing has been sorely missed," said Matt Galluzzo, Riverlife President and CEO. "We – along with boaters, kayakers, and everyone who utilizes the river – are very much looking forward to the beginning of construction."

A press conference is scheduled for Thursday, October 6th at Allegheny Landing Park, where Riverlife's President and CEO Matt Galluzzo will make remarks, along with Brent Semachko, Director of Corporate Responsibility for First National Bank (FNB), the largest subsidiary of F.N.B. Corporation, County Executive Rich Fitzgerald's office, Diana Bucco, president of The Buhl Foundation, Allegheny County's 37th District Senator Devlin Robinson, and additional keynote speakers.

"An instrumental component to this project has been the incredible support garnered from our corporate partnerships through the Waterfront Development Tax Credit program," said Galluzzo. "Through the generous contributions of our corporate sponsors at FNB, Duquesne Light Company, Lampe Financial LLC, PJ Dick, and UPMC Health Plan, Riverlife was able to unlock valuable resources to make Pittsburgh's riverfront parks world-class."

Semachko added, "In Pittsburgh and throughout our footprint, FNB contributes to projects that define and enrich the communities we serve. We are proud of our partnership with Riverlife and look forward to the renewed vitality of this cherished landmark."

Demolition and reconstruction of the dock substructure, beginning this week, will be completed by Marion Hill Associates, Inc. The installation of new framing and decking will be completed by Frank J. Zottola Construction, Inc.

Allegheny Landing Park restoration and improvements are also made possible with support from Allegheny Foundation, The Buhl Foundation, The Pittsburgh Foundation, EQT Foundation, The Jack Buncher Foundation, and Western Pennsylvania Conservancy.

"This work is important and exciting," said Galluzzo, "and it certainly signals a new dawn for this beloved and iconic riverfront park."
